The house committee at Washington investigating conditions in the Michigan copper mine strike area returned, and members indicated that their report would denounce the mine owners for refusing to allow their men to return to work without renouncing their unions.

Under President Wilson's orders issued from the war department at Washington, two additional regiments of American infantry were sent to Eagle Pass and Laredo, Tex., to allay fears of Mexican raids on border towns and banks.

Secretary Bryan in an address at Annapolis, Md., said he hoped that not only would this country borrow the initiative and referendum as it had borrowed the Australian ballot, but that in time it would adopt the postal vote. The postal vote allows a citizen, though away from home, to cast his vote on an election day and have it counted.

A charge that she had been offered $1,000 to give testimony fictitious to Leo M. Directors of the United States Express company voted at New York to wind up its affairs and have it go out of business. A general forward movement of both the Mexican federal and federal armies at Torreon, Mex., was begun, preliminary, it is believed, to opening of the long-deferred battle for possession of that city.

In the reported arrest at Chihuahua city of Maj. Rodolfo Fierro, "Pancho" Villa's chief lieutenant, constitutionalists in Juarez see the first step toward giving Great Britain satisfaction for the death of William S. Benton. Information gathered by the Carranza commission is said to indicate that Major Fierro was Benton's slayer.

A report from Chihuahua to Mexico City says that the reason General Villa continues to play for delay in the delivery of W. S. Benton's body is that it was buried next door to Villa's headquarters at Juarez, and that when an effort was made to recover the body Villa ordered it exhumed and burned.
